

Monarch Migration

Monarch butterflies migrate thousands of miles. Some fly from the northeastern United States and Canada to the plains of central Mexico. After spending the winter in this warmer place, they fly north again in the spring. Help this monarch find her way south. Draw a line to mark a path for her. Do not cross any unbroken state boundaries.

List at least three fascinating facts about butterflies or other insects. Go to the library or look on the Internet if you need help.